Majority at Westminster,
the House of Commons,
UK Parliament

326 seats, just over half of the seats (650), must be held so that a government will have a simple majority. However, the working majority is less (since the Speaker, the three Deputy Speakers and anyone elected (currently 7 MPs) from Sinn Fein (who do not take up their seats in Westminster do not participate in votes). So, the 2019, working majority is 320 seats.

Referendum

Referendums in the United Kingdom are seen as unconstitutional and without great value since they do not have to legally be acted upon. They are rarely used. There have been three UK nationwide referendums in the UK:

- 1975, to continue membership of the EU (YES vote at 67.23%).
- 2011, to have an alternative voting system than the first-past-the-post one (NO vote at 67.9%).
- 2016, asking whether or not the UK should remain part of or leave the EU (LEAVE vote, 51.89%).

There have been other referendums but there have not been very many and there have not been any other national ones.

Gerrymandering

The term was coined on 26th March 1812, in reference to Governor Elbridge Gerry, who agreed to the redistricting of Massachusetts during the Senate elections there, in order to benefit his Democratic-Republican Party. It was said to resemble a Salamander.

(Universal) Suffrage (UK)

Universal suffrage, with voting rights for women came about in 1918. However, it was partially universal (excluding voting rights for women under the age of 30 or those that did not own property). The Equal Franchise Act of 1928 brought about complete universal suffrage in the UK. In 1832 only 3% of the population in England and Wales had the right to vote. Reform Acts of 1832, 1867 and 1884, gradually widened that number and increased suffrage. Lord Charles Grey, the UK Prime Minister (1830-1834) stated that it was essential "to prevent the necessity of revolution" in 1832. The Secret Ballot was introduced in 1872. Until 1791, Catholics were excluded from voting in the UK.

Further reading

The State Opening of Parliament is the formal start to parliamentary sessions of the UK Parliament. The Queen's Speech (alternatively the King's Speech, in times of a male monarch on the throne) is the speech that is given by the monarch in a symbolic address that takes place in the House of Lords, the Upper Chamber of the Parliament. The speech is always read by the monarch and is always written by the government that is in power or that has just come to power. It is a highly symbolic ceremony in which the three separate branches of government are present together: the Crown-in-Parliament (the Queen, the House of Lords and the House of Commons), or the Legislature; the Queen-in-Council, (Minister's and the Privy Council), representing the Executive; and the Queen-on-the-Bench (Judges), representative of the Judiciary. The Queen leaves Buckingham Palace, but before she does, the cellars of Westminster are searched by the Yeoman of the Guard, in memory of the 1605 Gunpowder Plot against the Protestant King, James I by the Catholics led by Robert Catesby. A “hostage MP” is delivered up as a “prisoner” while the Queen goes to Parliament, to ensure her safe return. The ceremony today is a reminder that the safety of the monarch had to be ensured while entering a Parliament that could be hostile to them, stemming from the time of Charles I in 1649 and the English Civil War. The Queen goes to the House of Lords and takes her seat on the throne wearing the Imperial State Crown. Black Rod then proceeds to the House of Commons. No monarch since Charles I in 1642 has entered the House of Commons (he attempted to arrest 5 Members of Parliament). As Black Rod arrives at the doors of the Commons, the doors are slammed shut. He or she bangs the Black Rod mace on the door three times and they are opened, signifying the independence of the House of Commons from the control of the monarch. The MPs are then summoned to the House of Lords to attend the Queen’s Speech, or the “Speech from the Throne”. It is written on goatskin vellum and is read in a neutral fashion, without any inflection of disapproval or approval, with regular reference to “My Government will...” followed by the proposed bills that the government wishes to pass in the session being opened.
